There too, you will see Brontosaurus, Tyrannosaurus, Triceratops and many, many other prehistoric animals that ruled planet Earth for 100 million years. These animals have been carefully reconstructed by thousands of scientists from bones and skeletons found throughout the world. The biggest dinosaurs, the Sauropods, actually ruled the area of the United States.

"YOUR CAT"

YOU may like your cat very much, but that's only half the story. The real point is: Does your cat like you? More than any other creatures, cats know what and whom they like—or don't like. It all depends on how they're treated. Anyone who fails to treat them fairly and squarely is bound to fall out of grace with them. So, to be sure it won't be you, here are some tips about your tabby.

In the first place, cats are very sensitive animals. Not only are their bodies very easily hurt, but so are their feelings. A cat doesn't like to be laughed at any more than you or I, so never risk injuring his feelings this way. Your cat, like many animals, can enjoy a good joke now and then, but never one that is at his own expense. So when your cat does something foolish—well, say like falling flat on his face—don't let him know about it with loud, teasing laughter. He's liable to mope for hours if you do. He doesn't need teasing at a time like that; he needs comforting. Be sure you give it to him.

As for his bodily feelings, a cat has several "sore points" that he would let you know about in no uncertain terms if he could talk. His tail, for instance. It is a very touchy part of his body—in fact, it is really a part of his backbone and therefore is connected to many tender, easily injured nerves. A cat objects to having his tail pulled not only because it is undignified, but also because it is really extremely painful to him.

And now, about his whiskers. They are in reality very delicate "feelers" with which he can test the width of passageways. A cat knows that if an opening is large enough for his whiskers, then it will be large enough for the rest of his body to pass through. You might say his whiskers are a kind of feline radar! And because they are so very sensitive, the cat will instinctively jerk his head away when anyone touches them. So spare him this annoyance.

Then there's the problem of how to pick up your cat—which, by the way, you should not do too often. Too many people have the wrong idea of how to pick up a cat. For example, it is entirely wrong to pick up a cat by grasping the skin at the back of his neck and holding him aloft, all four legs dangling. Nor should he be picked up by the front legs, with the hind legs left hanging in midair.

The only right way to lift a cat is by placing one hand under his chest and forelegs, while the other hand completely supports his hind legs. In this way you hold the weight of his entire body, so that he feels safe and comfortable. When you have him off the ground, hold him against your body for further security.

Now, suppose that for a few days you were to switch places with your cat and he was to take care of you. How would you like it if he gave you your food in unwashed dishes? Or let your drinking water stand from day to day without changing? You wouldn't like it a bit. And the truth is that neither does your cat!

Cats are notably clean animals. Not only do they keep themselves immaculate, but they want the things around them to meet the same high standards! That's where you come in—with your scouring brush. You should wash your cat's dishes after every meal, never placing new food or drink in them until you have taken care of this. Milk should never be left long enough to turn sour, and his WATER MUST BE FRESH EVERY DAY. Water, by the way, is just as important to a cat as milk is, so be sure he has plenty of it on hand at all times.

And don't forget about FRESH GRASS for your cat to chew! It is of the greatest importance. If you live in an apartment house without access to growing grass outside, you must raise some in a flower box or flower pot on the window ledge. It will help keep your cat well, for it is the best natural medicine there is for him!

And what does this all add up to? In simple cat arithmetic: A good master equals a happy, healthy tabby!
